Most professionals today work under a lot of stress in their scope of practice. In addition, it is difficult to manage the work/life balance so the pressures and frustrations are often multiplied. Because of this condition, over time, many professionals find themselves medicating with booze, drugs and/or food. Alcoholism, drug dependence, and/or obesity often result. The outcomes of these problems are highly threatening and dangerous to one’s health, productivity, relationships, and well-being. Dr. Perry will present valuable information on this issue of addictions to booze, drugs, and food. He will include information on contributors, indicators, and recovery methods.
